

High-use rooms and commercial spaces

Use this page for bedrooms, clinics, gyms, childcare spaces, salons, offices, and other rooms where the air con runs hard

What this usually means

High-use rooms create a stronger case for regular maintenance because the unit runs longer, collects more contamination, and matters more to the people using the room every day.

Do this first

Treat high-use rooms as priority systems. Check records, check the vents, and do not rely on guesswork.

4-step check before you book

1

Identify the room type

Bedrooms, clinics, gyms, childcare areas, and busy workplaces need tighter standards.

2

Check the usage pattern

Long daily run times increase the need for routine maintenance.

3

Document the condition

Photos and notes matter more in business or customer-facing spaces.

4

Book before complaints

Do not wait for odour, poor airflow, or visible buildup to become a regular issue.

Watch for these signs

- Unit runs for long hours most days
- The room serves customers, staff, or children
- No recent maintenance record or photo trail

Best next step

For high-use rooms and commercial spaces, book on schedule instead of waiting for failure.
